O'Hara, SUFR members compromise after discussion

By KATE MANUEL
News Writer

After much discussion at Tuesday's meeting between Patricia O'Hara, Vice President of Student Affairs, and members of the group SUFR, a partial agreement was made toward filling one of the nine demands that SUFR presented to O'Hara on January 21. O'Hara said that she would act as a liaison for SUFR in setting up a meeting within the next two weeks between members of SUFR and Director of Student Activities Joe Cassidy, to discuss the use of Theodore's and the allotment of social space in Lafortune.

Several SUFR members expressed concern that contacting Cassidy directly would not be a sufficient solution to their need for meeting space. Members said they had not been effective in conveying minority needs to Cassidy in the past and that they wanted a prompt solution to this problem.

She agreed to assist the students in presenting their concerns to Cassidy after SUFR members began pressuring O'Hara to respond to at least one of their demands.

The compromise came after the group's presentation of the first four demands was discussed without solution. Group members began leaving the meeting, expressing disgust as the arguments continued but no conclusions were reached.

Prior to leaving the meeting, one SUFR member said to O'Hara. "You're going to commit to something tonight. Do you know how frustrated we are, it wouldn't be that hard to do for us. We have been very respectful, although you have not respected us. We have been very civil, although you have not always been civil."

"We've been talking since I've been here. I'm about to graduate and nothing has happened. I'm being disrespected and my people are being disrespected. Do you understand what I'm feeling?" said a SUFR member.

Other demands addressed prior to the compromise were the formulation of a racial harassment policy, autonomy of the Office of Minority Affairs and prerogative of the Director of Minority Students Affairs to select his own assistants, and the proposed multi-cultural center.

SUFR reiterated its demand for a racial harassment policy.
I hereby enter my name in the NFL Draft.

It is with great pain and a heavy heart that I announce today my in-tentions to forgo my se-"nior year of eligibility and put my name in the pool for the NFL draft.

After examining closely all sides of the issue, I have decided to beat the Feb. 1 deadline and take my risks with this year's draft.

It is true that I have not played football at Notre Dame, but I have been in close counsel the past few days with Football Coach Lou Holtz. After hearing of my decision, Holtz issued the following statement:

"While I have never actually heard of John O'Brien, I support fully his decision to enter the NFL Draft. Though I'm not really sure what he's done for the University of Notre Dame, I'm sure someone will miss him."

Frankly, I was touched.

While I haven't played organized football since eighth grade, I feel my talents speak for themselves. As long snorkler for the St. Cat's of Athens, Greece, playing against St. Rits, I snapped the ball over the head of the holder on THREE SUCCESSIVE fourth downs. He recovered the first two and ran them for first downs, but no dice on the third attempt.

Then, on two successive extra point tries, I snapped the ball over the head of the holder and crouched, into the hands of the kicker. This was a play we called "Not Pla-"ncation," a play I believe we made ND junior Matt Mullarkey—he was the kicker.

As a defensive end in the same game, I batted down one pass and got held by their tight end twice. I played such a great game that Coach Barry urged the team "not to kill him."

It's obvious that I have the credentials to play in the NFL, if not start in place of Mike Tomczak.

I want a helmet with a shaded sun visor.

Also, I have decided to wait until later to show in the JPW office-third floor LaFortune!!

Divers found with 366 pounds of cocaine

NEW YORK - Police scuba divers found two

Colombians and 366 pounds of cocaine stowed away in the air pocket of an oil tanker's rudder shaft, where the men had weathered a five-day voyage, the Customs Service said.

The divers found the men last week soaked and shivering in the rudder shaft of the Bright Eagle, which was anchored in New York Harbor, special agent Van Etten said Monday. "This particular type of ship has an enlarged rudder housing area and we targeted it for search because of this design," said Van Etten, in charge of the Customs Service's regional office in Newark, N.J.

Lozano to donate 1 million for Hispanic ND students

Special to The Observer

An executive of the nation's largest daily Spanish-language newspaper will endow a $1 million scholarship fund to benefit deserving Hispanic students at the University of Notre Dame. The fund is the gift of Notre Dame trustee Ignacio E. Lozano, Jr., editor-in-chief of the Los Angeles-based La Opinion and a former U.S. ambassador to El Salvador. Acknowledging the gift, Rev. Edward Malloy, C.S.C., Notre Dame's president, said, "This most generous benefaction by 'Nacho' Lozano addresses two of Notre Dame's foremost priorities—our need for increased endowed scholarships and fellowships and our desire to increase the opportunities for Hispanic and other minority students to attend the University."

"Through three generations my family has been blessed with the good fortune that has permitted our newspaper enterprise to flourish," Lozano said. "I believe it is now time to share this blessing with young Hispanic men and women of this and future generations who have the opportunity but not the financial capacity to enter Notre Dame education, with all the values that this represents."

A native of San Antonio, Lozano was graduated from Notre Dame in 1947 with a bachelor's degree in journalism and joined the staff of La Opinion that same year. He has been the paper's publisher or chief editor since 1953, with the exception of his service as ambassador to El Salvador from 1976-77 by appointment of President Gerald Ford. Lozano was named a member of Notre Dame's Board of Trustees in 1983 and was awarded an honorary degree by the University in 1990. He served on an executive planning body and as Orange County, Calif., chairman of Notre Dame's just-completed, $450-plus million "Strategic Moment" fund raising campaign, the most successful development effort in the history of Catholic higher education.

Among his many previous gifts to the University was a contribution to the Jose Napoleon Duarte Scholarship Trust, established in honor of the late Salvadoran president who was also a Notre Dame graduate.

Lozano serves on a number of nonprofit and corporate boards, among them BankAmerica Corporation, the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, Los Angeles branch; Walt Disney Company; and National Public Radio, and his memberships include the Council on Foreign Relations and the Knights of Malta.

Lozano and his wife, Marta, have four children. Jose, a son, is the publisher of La Opinion, and the youngest child, Francisco, is a freshman at Notre Dame.

1991 Iceberg Debates to begin

By CHRIS WILKINSON

The third annual Iceberg Debates are scheduled to begin next Tuesday with "big-time athletics" as the first topic of discussion.

The Iceberg Debates were instituted in 1989 to "increase student awareness of key local, national, and international issues" and to encourage student debate within the dorms, according to Suzanne Fitzgerald, public relations director for the debates. The debates, which begin Feb. 5, consist of six rounds of competition. Representative teams from each dorm participate in each of the first three rounds before eliminations, which are based on debate record, occur.

The fourth round, the quarter finals, is on Feb. 19. The Semi­finals are being held Feb. 27 and the finals are on March 5. Each dorm has a co-ed team which consists of at least two members from the dorm and at least one member of the opposite sex. Fisher and Grace have two teams.

Students are chosen to participate on teams on a first-come, first-serve basis. One of the main misconceptions of the debates is that participants need prior debate experience. The debates are designed to increase communication skills and to foster intellectual life on campus. Anyone with an interest in public speaking can become involved.

Invitations to judge the debates are sent to faculty members, law students, and history and government graduate students. Those that accept the invitation must attend a seminar to learn how to critique the proceedings.

The winning dorm receives a $500 dollar prize and the traveling trophy.

In rounds one and two, the teams will debate the same topic: "That big-time athletics play a detrimental role in American colleges and universities."

All students are encouraged to attend the round one (Feb. 5) or round two (Feb. 7) debates happening in their dorm. There will be a question and answer period during which students can voice their personal opinions.

Priest from Medjugorje speaks about apparitions

By ANNAMARIE ZELL

The apparitions of the Virgin Mary in Medjugorje are "too good not to be true," said Father Philip Pavich of the parish in Medjugorje, Yugoslavia.

Six local youths claim the blessed Virgin has been appearing to them over the past nine years, calling the world to peace, prayer, conversion and fasting.

There has been a lot of controversy concerning the validity of these visions. Pavich said that there is too much evidence affirming the reality of the facts. He refers to the success of Medjugorje, saying that of the fifteen million pilgrims who have visited Medjugorje, millions have been moved and their lives changed and filled with the spirit of the Blessed Mother. He cited thousands of Medjugorje prayer groups in numerous countries in every language.

"If Medjugorje isn't true it ought to be invented," said Pavich. "Why don't 15 million people come to each parish? They're welcome to try it. I'd love to see this imitated on a human level.

He said that it would be impossible for anyone to accomplish Medjugorje success without supernatural intervention.

Pavich spent some time in Jerusalem and he noted that even the location of Christ's death isn't equalling the attention Medjugorje is receiving.

"This doesn't happen in Jerusalem, so I thought to myself: Where have they all gone?"

He continued, "The answer I received was that they're going to Medjugorje. That's when I first started to think about going to Medjugorje."

Pavich said he doubts that "six ragamuffin kids, aged ten to seventeen could make it up." Pavich sees much significance in the date of the original sighting. The Blessed Virgin was first seen on June 24, and on June 25, she declared herself the Queen of Peace.

June 24 is the Feast Day of St. John the Baptist. Pavich asked, "What better day for Mary to explain herself than on St. John's feast day. St. John was the first to be the revealer of God's lamb. Mary formed that lamb. She brought him to the light of day."

Pavich said that the location of Medjugorje creates a mystical Trinity between the Church, Apparition Mountain, and the large cross erected in 1933 to celebrate the 1500th anniversary of the death of Jesus Christ's death.

With the abundance of evidence in Medjugorje favor, Pavich urged the audience, "to get beyond this Mickey Mouse doubting. You can't make it up."

In response to the question of why do so many priests have a problem believing in the miracle of Medjugorje, Pavich referred to a troublesome time in his life when he wanted to quit the priesthood.

"Any priest can get in a blue funk," Pavich said. He describes his own "blue funk" as a time when he was "proud, charismatic, anti-Pope, Mary and Church."

Pavich concluded with the advice, "Don't judge the priest. Please pray for him. We all need our mother's milk to survive."

Pavich also advised, "Don't let them rob you of your crosses. Keep the Cross central symbol in our lives, our masses. If Jesus and the Cross are not in then we're all "out.""

The presentation was sponsored by the Queen of Peace Ministries and the Knights of Columbus.

The second National Medjugorje conference will take place in the JACC, June 14-16.

Panel talks of ordination of women

By CAROLINE CLARKE

Women should be ordained as priests, agreed a panel of speakers that met Tuesday night at Hesburgh Library.

The panel speakers included Notre Dame theology professor Bob Krieg, C.S.C., St. Mary's theology professor Sr. Elena Malizia, and Notre Dame theology student Mrs. Anne Seckinger.

As director of Notre Dame's Master of Divinity Program, Fr. Krieg sees many women with all the qualities it takes to be ordained. Asked what the future for the Catholic church might be, he stated, "I see a new understanding for what it means to be a priest. There will be a whole new range of ministries."

Krieg asserted that the key to an understanding of the church's job to recognize which men and women are being called by the Holy Spirit.

"In our society, women are assuming new forms of leadership. The conflict that may arise is that strict cultural and sociological patterns still exist. Other societies may not accept women as readily. In the Catholic church, we try to do things universally."

Sr. Elena holds that in principle women should be ordained.

"It misplaces the argument to say that women have a right to be ordained. That is one right; it's a calling." She continued that the incarnation was not about Jesus becoming a man, but God becoming human.

Mrs. Anne Seckinger supports the inclusion of women to serve in the priesthood.

"Women have a whole different perspective and spiritually than men. Our troubled world needs what they have to offer."

According to Bob Krieg, the priesthood is dwindling. Despite a decrease, the number of lay people (men and women) is on the upswing.

Sponsored by the ladies of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's, the event was moderated by Dr. John Houck, a Notre Dame business professor.
Members of SUFR are angered by 'disrespect'

By CATHY FLYNN
News Writer

Members of Students United for Respect (SUFR) gathered at the University of Notre Dame to speak with members of the administration on Tuesday evening. The meeting, originally scheduled for another place and time, took place in a conference room in LaFortune at Vice President of Student Affairs, Patricia O'Hara's request.

Because the racial harassment policy would be university-wide, affecting students, faculty, and staff, it is in the process of being discussed on all levels and is working its way to the Academic Council, said O'Hara, who expects the policy to be approved by the Academic Council at its April meeting.

SUFR members expressed concern that discussing the racial harassment policy on all levels was a delaying tactic on the Administration's part and a racial harassment policy covering discriminatory harassment of any sort was formulated, O'Hara said.

and expressed discontent with the progress that had been made in formulating such a policy.

A SUFR member said, "It seems to me that the whole handling of the racial harassment policy is terrible. You should ask the students what they want in a racial harassment policy."

Last year the Provost's office formed an ad hoc committee to talk about racial harassment and a racial harassment policy covering discriminatory harassment of any sort was formulated, O'Hara said.

The students waited at Hayes-Healy for ten minutes before they walked over to the location O'Hara had selected.

One SUFR member said to O'Hara, "I personally felt incredibly upset when you did not show up and set up a meeting at the same time and in a different place."

"The fact that she is not here is a sign of disrespect for me and for all students," one student called from the crowded auditorium in Hayes-Healy. "Come on! Let's go over and talk to her. I'm getting mad on now!"

Price then reminded the crowd that they had not been rescheduled the meeting on Monday, Jan. 28, and asked only members of SUFR to attend the discussion in the Notre Dame Room of LaFortune.

"We're here (at the student forum) today as a group of students waiting to meet the institution," Robert Price, '90, said. "Let this be a sign, there is no one from the Administration here."

The students waited at Hayes-Healy for ten minutes before they walked over to the location.
Bush gives a reassuring State of the Union speech

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Bush confidently assured Americans Tuesday night that the war against Iraq will be won and the recession at home will end in a years-end order. "We stand at a defining hour," the president said in his State of the Union address.

"For two centuries, we've done the hard work of freedom. And tonight, we lead the world in facing down a threat to decency and humanity," Bush said in a nationally broadcast address to a joint session of Congress.

It was the first wartime State of the Union address since the dark days of Vietnam. Extraordinary security precautions enshrouded the Capitol, a how to threats of terrorism.

He won a long standing ovation when he praised U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf as "truly America's finest" and again when he predicted "we will prevail" over Saddam Hussein.

"As Americans, we know there are times when we must step forward and accept our responsibility to lead the world away from the dark chaos of dictatorship, toward the brighter promise of a better future," Bush said in his 34-minute speech.

The president delivered a strong assessment of the war to date. "I'm pleased to report that we are on course. Iraq's capacity to sustain war is being destroyed.

"Time will not be Saddam's friend."

Shortly before the president spoke, United States and the Soviet Union issued a joint statement that said a cease fire would be possible if Iraq made "an unequivocal commitment" to withdraw all its troops from Kuwait and took "concrete steps" in that direction. It was the first indication the White House might be willing to accept less than immediate, total withdrawal of Saddam's troops.

With Americans' attention focused on the almost half-million troops risking their lives in the Persian Gulf, Bush devoted the heart of his annual address to the two-week-old battle to force Saddam out of Kuwait.

In the Congress, Democrats and Republicans rallied behind the president. "Now that war has begun, we'll work to see that it's swift and decisive, with the least possible loss of life," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, one of those who had preferred diplomacy to war.

Along with the Cabinet, lawmakers and the diplomatic corps, there were two special guests in the audience: Brenda Schwartzkopf, wife of Desert Storm commander Norman Schwartzkopf, and Alma Powell, wife of Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Both received standing ovations when introduced by Bush.

Bush also paid tribute to the democratic aspirations of the people of the Soviet Baltic states and said he remained "deeply concerned" about the Kremlin's bloody crackdown.

Bush, who met Monday with Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh, said force Saddam out of Kuwait would bring a resumption of dialogue with the Republics and a "move away from violence." Administration sources said the United States was expecting "substantial withdrawal," and some roll back had already begun.

Bush also announced he was renaming the deep-blue Strategic Defense Initiative to protect against limited ballistic missiles threats, rather than an all-out nuclear war.

Ways to clean up oil spills

Mechanical
Floating booms contain the spill near the source or block it from sensitive areas

Skimmer boats feed the oil together to be sucked up into collection barges

Shrings of absorbent pads soak up oil on patches and in water too shallow for skimmer boats

Fire

Oil must be fairly concentrated to burn, and crude is hard toignite

Chemical agents and lasers improve effectiveness

Clamping agents cause floating crudes to gather together for easier pickup, or sink to the bottom where it does not form

Dispersing agents break slicks

Boiladucts: Chemical agents are also poloular.

Natural

Wind and wave action emulsifies some oil into the water (like shaking salad dressing)

Bacteria naturally consume some crude over time

New "bioremediation" techniques use special bacteria in large quantities to consume crude much faster - first used in open water after the 1990 Mega Brg tanker accident off Texas

Informal consultations

United Nations Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar leaves the U.N. after informal Security Council consultations on Monday. The Secretary-General declined comment on a letter from Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz denouncing him and the Council.

Americans speak out on the current state of nation

WASHINGTON (AP) - Ask some thoughtful Americans - a house painter a philosophy professor, an Oregon fishing guide - about the state of the union and what comes through is a twinge of doubt in a land of optimism.

"We're in serious trouble," said Mike Mears, Vietnam veteran, criminal lawyer, mayor of the Atlanta suburb of Decatur, Ga. "Five months ago most people didn't know about Iraq and here we find ourselves basically in World War III."

Carl Sagan, famous astrophysicist, thought going to war was a mistake.

"Things like 'corrupt,' " answered McGill. "Things like 'corrupt, dishonest.' Those are awfully strong words, but our society's slipping."

As President Bush prepared to go before Congress and nation to report on the state of the union, some ordinary and some well-known people were asked their views.

George Nigh had no doubts: America remains a land of opportunity.

"Build a two-way bridge from the U.S. to any other country in the world," said the former governor of Oklahoma, now a college lecturer in Edmond, Okla. "You might as well put up a one-way sign because people want to come to America."

Frank Lopresti, 31, of Phoenixville, Pa., who sells pizza slices so big they slop over the sides of paper plates, thought the country had changed since he came to America from Sicily 15 years ago.

Jobs, opportunities are not there as they used to be," he said. "Still, it is the best country, you can always work."

And Ben Wattenberg, a Washington expert on population trends, took a dim view of American nail-biting.

NEW YORK (AP) — The satellite dishes and information technology are the TV networks. Coverage of war with Iraq has become just as indispensable as the voices and images of U.S. dissent.

"Two years not the medium of protest," said Marty Lucas, producer of the Gulf Crisis TV Project. "Nowadays you really need to have a TV camera to participate in the debate.

As the Jan. 15 deadline approached for Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait, the project broadcast two hours of programs for peace — town meetings, speeches, panel talks, protest songs and demonstrations against U.S. intervention. So far, the Gulf Crisis TV Project has aired on 26 Public Broadcasting Service stations and more than 300 cable television stations. "I would be very surprised if less than 1 million people had seen it," Lucas said.

That's a conservative guess. PBS affiliates that aired the show included New York City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Washington, Seattle, San Diego, Denver, Phoenix, Evansville, Ind., Lubbock, Texas, and Charleston, Ill.

The four shows, compiled from raw tapes and independent producers around the country, were barely publicized.

There were reports on oil, arms, politics, and grass-roots organizing, with commentaries from distinguished U.S. activists such as Daniel Ellsberg and Ralph Delosua, 39, of New York City.

Perhaps more impressive is that the Gulf Crisis TV Project received no cable access or independent producers around the country, were barely publicized. "It wasn't a 'splendid television' but it was more powerful than words," Lucas said.

But the Gulf Crisis TV Project also received little coverage on local broadcast and cable stations.

The project — its logo is a TV with an antenna — was "presents" — transmitted on the PBS internal system — by Philadelphia Public Television and WYBE and accepted for review by CNN and CBS, turned a "no".

The project — its logo is a TV showing the universal "NO." circle and diagonal slash superimposed on an army tank — began in August after Iraq invaded Kuwait and President Bush sent U.S. troops to Saudi Arabia.

It is a venture of Paper Tiger Television, a New York City production group, and the Deep Dish TV Satellite Network, which has distributed programs to community access stations and cable systems since 1986.

"The critical link is that Deep Dish has been cultivating this network for five years," Lucas said.

"We worked closely with 150 stations and got 125 shows from independent producers around the country. Most were cable access, some were from peace groups, some were music videos from sophisticated L.A. production companies. It varied.

"The 125 raw tapes represented 80 to 90 hours of video — about two weeks of showing. The project team logged the tapes and began editing.

When four shows were ready, the project started mailing and phone producers and "pull down" the program from the satellite, and it encouraged local producers to tie project's shows into "wraparounds" with their shows.

"What surprised us is when we were able to hook up with WYBE, " Lucas said.

WYBE, USB channel 15, is Philadelphia's "second" public cable access program, some last June with a full-time staff of eight and a budget of less than $1 million. The project was its first time as a PBS "presenter."

"We're committed here at the station to making sure that voices that usually go unheard can be heard clearly," said Aaron Ezekiel, WYBE's general manager. "Now that the technologies are becoming affordable, it's very important to make sure the widest possible range of voices is heard.

The Gulf Crisis TV Project does not end here, the producers said.

NORTHERN SAUDI ARABIA (AP) — Each night at dusk, scout patrols slap their faces with camouflage paint and leave the haven of their lines to probe for Iraqi weaknesses.

Scouts of the 82nd Airborne Division's 2nd Brigade inch a little farther each night. They're now operating within three miles of the northern border.

"Every night we get a little closer and every night we get a little more of a picture of what's out there," said Lt. Joseph Sacchetti of Philadelphia, a 28-year-old platoon leader of scouts from the 1st Battalion, 325th Infantry Regiment.

The paratroopers' jobs are to gather and assemble bits of information about the terrain and Iraqi positions.

To do this, they arrive at the spot where their methodical, painstaking work stopped the night before, then crawl on elbows and knees to new watch posts farther out.

"This is about as close as you can get to the border without paying taxes in the other coun-

University neglects commitment to ethnic students

On Monday, Jan. 21, the celebration of Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birth, a group of ethnic students entered the Notre Dame community to ask itself where its primary allegiance lies. The central message of the Gospel, as we understand it, is that government's policies violate Gospel values. We unequivocally condemn the brutal atrocities of Saddam Hussein. But we also condemn our own government's bombing of Iraq. This war violates not only the principles of Christian pacifism, but the criteria of the Just War Theory as well, as outlined recently in two letters by the American Catholic bishops.

As followers of Christ, we believe that obedience to the Gospel's message of love and nonviolence takes precedence over loyalty to any human government, especially when that government's policies violate Gospel values. We, the members of the Pax Christi Notre Dame, are committed to our consciences to speak out against the war in the Middle East. We challenge the Notre Dame community to ask itself where its primary allegiance lies. And we appeal to the Administration to end patrolling Panama's streets, violating Panama's sovereignty, and its Canal treaties. Even worse, U.S. military intervention of $500 million will not be enough to cover part of the damages caused by U.S. troops.

Dear Editor:

Thirteen months ago the United States invaded Panama. The reasons the Bush Administration gave were a) that not enough troops were on hand to defend the Panama treaties and c) defend democracy.

In the invasion, 24,000 U.S. soldiers attacked and occupied Panama. Between 1000 and 2000 Panamanians (mostly civilians, plus about 500 special forces, who were murdedered in nine days, according to independent sources. Thousands lost their homes—due to "the precise job" of super-steel bombards and other military interventions—mainly in El Chorrillo (about 200,000 people live in this poor neighborhood). In San Miguelito, more than 500 persons were imprisoned and huge material damage was caused. The Panamanian Chamber of Commerce asserted that the economic damage of the invasion was at least $1 billion.

After the apprehension of Noriega, Guillermo Endara, the apparent winner of elections held in May 1989, was sworn in as president of Panama on a U.S. military base. No new elections have been held since then, and U.S. troops still continue patrolling Panama's streets, violating Panama's sovereignty, and its Canal treaties. Even worse, U.S. military intervention of $500 million will not be enough to cover part of the damages caused by U.S. troops.

George Bush wrote in his letter, referring to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait: "If armed men invaded a home in this country, killed those in their way, stole what they wanted and then announced the house was now theirs, no one would hesitate about what must be done. Well, Mr. Bush, it is nice, then, that you understand the situation your Administration and others before it have created in Panama and in dozens of other countries around the world. But it is not onlyfdbtiful and deeply outrageous that the brutal hangman suddenly speaks of "right and justice," "human rights," and "moral obligation." Both Noriega and Hussein were in part "U.S. creations," and they both were (or are) being destroyed by the same machinery, with thousands of civilian casualties in the process. An interesting chapter of history will be written when Mr. Bush clarifies his relationships with both of them while he was the director of the CIA. As long as people like him want to install this form of "New World Order" and "desperately want peace," I have to sincerely say that I am against peace.

Dear Editor:

I have little sympathy for Saddam Hussein. I grudge for the Iraqi people, however, especially the Iraqi soldiers. I grudge, too, for all the young men and women of the UN coalition. What madness is it that obliges so much bloodshed for an almost certain outcome?

In the present moment, Saddam Hussein bears a heavy burden of guilt for the suffering beings he has imposed upon each other. In the broader perspective, however, one can hardly blame him for a burden of guilt. Our foreign policy has consistently sought to maintain divisions in the Middle East to secure cheaper oil for ourselves, to maintain allies in Europe and Japan, and to check Soviet hegemony. The Soviet Union's withdrawal from the international balance of power has unleashed forces which now equilibrate. Our participation in the Gulf War is frightening, yet at our absence would be no less momentous. What are we, as a society, to do? How can we set things right?

Students showed lack of understanding at peace rally

Dear Editor:

I'd like to respond to the barrage of pro-war distortion and personal attacks that have occurred in recent days. I will not defend or condone this unfortunate war with which this country is involved. I would certainly face the public relations nightmares that have beset other those who choose not to fight.

Our system of government rests upon a system of "checks and balances." I have adhered to this system all through my four years in college, but perhaps some have missed the point. Our founders mistrusted an unmonarchical system of power and government. I do not oppose the government, but the purpose of government is to be governed. The outstanding intolerance for this system that has been displayed by wholeheartedly back Bush in his aggressive position.

I am finding it more and more distressing to respond to the rhetoric both sides have executives in the recent days. The attention to a related issue more directly relevant to this country is the ongoing support of the American military in the region.

Their expressions reflect a reality that we have not been able to turn our backs on. We have fought three wars in the last 15 years. Before the Persian Gulf War, we were in conflict in Kosovo, in Botswana, and I could continue. We have fought against all of these countries for minimal concessions on both sides.

We support the troops by showing them a united country, and even going so far as blaming the anti-war movement for loss in Vietnam. The usual response to this type of criticism is that the protesters support the troops by praying for peace, and hoping for their safe return to home. I would like to think that people on this campus do not hold a view that the war is a joke. I would like to think that people on this campus do not hold a view that the war is a joke.

One thing is clear, regardless of whether you are for or against war in the Gulf. People are fighting for the survival of Kuwaiti and Saudi lives. They are all members of the same human race. We are asking, why? They are asking why to a president who has chosen to cloak his motives in rhetoric and calls to patriotism. They are asking why to irresponsible leaders around the world who choose to embroil their nations in unjust conflict.

Bush has right to pray in reflection

Dear Editor:

Christian Dupont's letter about President Bush's prayer for peace [The Observer, Jan. 23] was perhaps the most perspective piece I have read in The Observer. I take issue with her claim that President Bush is not a religious person.

Dupont wrote that Bush "is not a religious person." I disagree. I believe that President Bush's "new world order" is religious imperialism. If I understand the words of the prophets, we are in a period of spiritual crisis. Bush wants to decimate the Mohammedans. The Middle East is not in crisis. Its mindless rhetoric is unbalanced, both in practice and in theory. Our president's religious prayer is a part of that reflection, so be it.

Under the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, everyone has a right to free religion, whether he is a president or a pauper. By calling Billy Graham a "radical"Dupont denies our president that right and implies that his religion is not the one that Mr. Bush practices. Dupont claims Bush's religious imperialism when he himself scorns the religion of the world, but hypocritically practices it himself.

Gulf crisis group wants diplomatic settlement

Dear Editor:

Since the massive deployment of United States armed forces, the University of Notre Dame's Gulf Crisis Action Group (GCAG) has been committed to bringing about a peaceful resolution to the conflict in the Middle East. In these days of international turmoil, emotional tensions run high and passions flare. This is a natural response to the present situation in the Persian Gulf, for we as a nation are deeply committed to life. We dread thinking how many lives this conflict will take.

Thus, support for our troops in the Persian Gulf region is imperative. Indeed, patriotism—love and support for our service men and women—is the common denominator of the members of the GCAG when we call for an immediate cease-fire in the war and the establishment of a United Nations peacekeeping force in the region.

The GCAG vehemently condemns Saddam Hussein's attack on Kuwait and Iraq's bombing of civil targets in Iran. In particular, we are dismayed by the injury and death that the bombing raids of the United States and its allies have brought to the Iraqi people. Only by stopping the bombs can we be sure that our future ones will come alive.

The GCAG is committed to ending further aggression in the Middle East. Prior to the UN's Jan. 15 deadline, economic sanctions had already begun to cripple Iraq's economy and military resolve. If these economic sanctions, with their broad coalition support, had been given sufficient time to run their intended course, they could have proved effective in forcing Saddam Hussein to negotiate a table. Whether they could have brought about their desired effect will never be known.

We support attempts at diplomacy and negotiation in realizing a non-military resolution to the Gulf crisis. A diplomatic settlement in which Iraq withdraws from Kuwait, with minimal concessions on both sides, is certainly preferable to continued war. A Middle Eastern peace conference, one such concession, would not be rewarding aggression—after all, the objective of the UN resolution (Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait) would be satisfied. Furthermore, a peace conference carries the promise of deterring future aggression in the Persian Gulf region.

The GCAG values an informed, reasoned approach in the assessment of the situation in the Iraq invasion and the present war. We encourage others to join us in making a considered inquiry into the facts and ethics of the situation. Together we can work to bring peace and stability to the region, to bring our troops home, and to end the war now.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

War calls for mutual respect among divided Americans

Our local system, too, follows a similar pattern. In our defense and prosecution engage in debate, and the conclusion, and, if true, will win out. Thus, it is with my friends also. They represent differences in our capacity to reflect critically upon its actions, our capacity for our nation an informed and sensitive conscience. Our country measures patriotism from a window of understanding at peace.

One can appreciate President Bush's "new world order" is religious imperialism. If I understand the words of the prophets, we are in a period of spiritual crisis. Bush wants to decimate the Mohammedans. The Middle East is not in crisis. Its mindless rhetoric is unbalanced, both in practice and in theory. Lysohir has done various installations in ceramics. Staying in the sculptural aspect of the medium, she has completed massive pieces such as the twenty-four-footattleship as part of "The Dark Side of Dazzle." That particular installation around the seafaring war.

Another example of her work is "Bad Manners." This piece is about greed and distinguishing between luxuries and necessities. It includes a large table overflowing with a grotesque amount of food and four headless, limbless people. Lysohir and her work have featured in many ceramic books and magazines, most recently in a book titled, "Artists at Work: Twenty-Five Northwest Glassmakers, Ceramists And Bowelers."

Lysohir just completed a one week artist-in-residency program at Saint Mary's College. During that time she gave two public lectures and worked with students on her most recent piece called "Bad Manners II." This piece also centers around greed and distinguishing between luxuries and necessities.

Lysohir's work will be on display in Hammes Gallery until February 22.

Also on display at Saint Mary’s College is the Juried Alumnae Exhibition in Moreau and Little Theatre galleries. This show features the work of sixty-five years of graduation classes. The work ranges from paintings and drawings to ceramics and sculpture.

The juror of the show was Susan Vissor, director and curator of the South Bend Art Center. Vissor said after judging the show, "I congratulate Saint Mary’s on their obvious high level of serious art instruction and thank them for this opportunity to experience so many fine and stimulating works of art."

Patriots' general manager, Patrick Sullivan, resigns

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — An emotional Patrick Sullivan, upon his resignation with the New England Patriots, resigned Tuesday night after the team lost to the Houston Texans, leaving him without an assistant general manager and others.

The Patriots announced that Sullivan, 49, is stepping down, effective immediately, following a 20-0 loss to the Texans on Sunday night. The team also announced that Brian Flores, head coach of the Miami Dolphins, will take over as interim general manager and focus on the team's immediate needs.

Sullivan, who has been with the team since 2015, is regarded as one of the most influential figures in the organization and has been involved in every aspect of the team's operations, from player personnel to business operations.

Sullivan's departure comes after a difficult season for the Patriots, who finished the year with a 6-10 record and missed the playoffs for the first time in his tenure.

The team's struggles, including a loss to the Texans, have led to speculation that Sullivan's job was in jeopardy, according to reports.

The Patriots have not publicly addressed the situation, but sources close to the organization have said that Sullivan's decision was mutual.

Sullivan's departure marks the end of an era for the Patriots, who have been a model of success under his leadership. Sullivan was the first general manager in the organization's history, having been brought in to replace Bill Belichick when the team was struggling in 2015.

Sullivan's resignation comes as the team looks to the future. The Patriots have some key decisions to make in the coming months, including a potential coaching change, a move to a new stadium, and a rebuilding of their roster.

Sullivan's departure is a significant loss for the organization, but the team has shown a willingness to adapt and change in the past. The Patriots have a history of resilience and have been able to bounce back from adversity.

It remains to be seen how the team will move forward, but there is no doubt that Sullivan's impact will be felt for years to come.

The team's next steps will be closely watched by fans and media alike, and it will be interesting to see how the organization responds to this significant change.

Olympic sports teams was nonexistent," said Scholl. 33, who left his job at an Elkhart ad agency to become Director of Fund Raising for the 1987 International Summer Special Olympic Games Committee. "In recent years, we have seen a tremendous increase in (fan involvement), especially in women's basketball, he says. "A good example is in women's basketball. They're ranked 19th in the country. As soon as they got ranked, attendance came right up.

"Two years ago, the women's team averaged 200 fans per game," he says. "Last year, they averaged 660. This year, we hope to draw about 1,200 per game. We've got some things coming up that we hope will draw a lot of fans to the games."

Yet sports marketing alone never will do the job.

"One thing that I should preface this entire thing on is that you have to have a good sports program for sports marketing to work," he says.

Scholl, and his entourage—which consists of one intern, Jim Fralohig, and a legion of student volunteers—have targeted members of the South Bend community and Notre Dame students in their sports marketing.

They would arrange, for example, for McDonald's to hand out free women's basketball tickets to patrons, or they would have a Boy Scout Night at a hockey game. Or they would give free soup buckets to the first 200 fans in attendance at a sporting event.

"Nothing is more satisfying for us to see than a large student turnout," he says. "It's critical to us for a lot of reasons. One is because they're the athletes' peers out there. Secondly, we love the atmosphere the students create. They're not afraid to yell out and cheer, while some South Bend residents are.

And yet, as Scholl will concede, his sports marketing has been directed primarily on residents rather than students.

"I think I personally have not done the job of extending the invitation to students," he says. "On the other hand, we must be realistic—there are over 200 home dates for paid­ admission events, and probably 150 of those are including free ones. We also know that students' time is severely limited."

Despite this disadvantage, Scholl says he's stepping up marketing toward students in the future. One asset he has this year is his student voluntees—30 strong—who open up the possibilities for spreading the word, and offering ideas, for upgaging.

"Student volunteers are effective because we're students and we know how busy students are," says Anne Dinsbuh, a senior student volunteer. "But because of marketing we know how to get students' attention. Sports marketing is new, it's different, and each of the volunteers got a list of different areas that we could work in—table tents, flyers, a 900­ number, giving sponsors, donating, and we all got to pick what we wanted to work on."

With all this help, Scholl can concentrate on innovative ways of marketing Notre Dame sports. Besides that it's a job that is unique in the field of collegiate sports marketing because he does not have to direct any of his efforts on football, basketball or fund raising.

"We're fortunate here in that the (football and basketball) programs prove much­self ourselves. We're promoting women's basketball here as much as most people are promoting men's basketball at other schools. I don't know of any school that has a position where a person can worry only about Olympic sports."

This leads many to the question of whether Notre Dame is laying the tracks for a much bigger sports marketing­luc­ orative perhaps. Other universities will be in Notre Dame's sit­ motion of Olympic sports pro­ tion 10 or 15 years from now."

Scholl has to think about this before he answers.

"I think schools are going to concentrate on one or two programs where they'll really put as much effort, he surmises.

"I don't think you'll find a lot of schools that will actively promote programs in addition to the two main ones. Football puts us in a very unique situation. And so another Notre Dame program is reduced to its essential Irish football. Sports marketing here is in its prominient position because of what football gives to the University—revenue to improve the quality of life for its stu­

Pistons’ Thomas will miss rest of season

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Isiah Thomas had bones in his right hand fused on Tuesday and the surgeon who performed the operation said it is unlikely the Detroit Pistons guard will play again this season.

"I suppose if his wrist is real solid and the bone is real sturdy, he could play sometime in May, but I’m a little nervous setting him loose on a basketball court until I’m convinced he’s ready," Dr. Kirk Watson said.

Thomas, 29, underwent a 45-minute operation at Hartford Hospital Tuesday morning and then headed back to Detroit. Thomas, selected the most valuable player in the NBA finals as Detroit won its second straight NBA title last season, said Watson.

"It is anticipated that his return to basketball might be as early as the first week in May" after a 13-week recuperation, Paolucci said Tuesday.

The deterioration of Thomas’ wrist also has caused some minor arthritis, but that may clear, Watson said.

"I wouldn’t have wanted him to wait until June to undergo surgery or the arthritis might have been much worse," Watson said.

The operation involved taking a graft from Thomas’ forearm and fusing the scaphoid bone, one of eight small bones in the wrist, to two other bones to keep it from rotating and further damaging ligaments.

Watson performed similar surgery on Adrian Dantley in 1983, and he came back to lead the NBA in scoring in 1984.

Watson said he was "very pleased" with the operation and expressed confidence that Thomas will come back strong.

Thomas decided to have the operation when, after being examined by Watson, he performed poorly against Boston last Wednesday. The wrist had been bothering him for about nine months.

"He has a very, very high threshold of pain," McCloskey said at the time. "He just couldn’t go on."

Thomas, who has averaged 20 points and 9.8 assists in 10 NBA seasons, was averaging a career-low 16 points a game this season.

He will miss a scheduled start in the NBA All-Star Game on Feb. 10. Thomas and Chicago’s Michael Jordan were picked as the guards for the Eastern Conference team.

The Pistons are 3-0 since replacing Thomas on the roster with former Piston John Long.

Author of "Squeeze Play" speaks on women and sports writing

By CHRIS COONEY
Assistant Sports Editor

For Jane Leavy the issue of women reporters in men's locker rooms has little to do with physical nakedness.

"Nudity per se isn't the issue," said Leavy, who spent five years surveying the scene as a sportswriter for the Washington Post. "It's with being seen for what you are. Vulnerability is the issue."

Leavy, speaking on "Sportswriting: A Woman's Place" Tuesday night, said that while most men readily talk to women reporters in locker rooms, the reluctance some players feel centers not on exposing body parts but on revealing their true selves.

"In the era of 'personality journalism,' reporters have the ability to undress the celebrity on the page," said Leavy.

Male athletes seem especially willing to tell women reporters about aspects of their personal lives, an openness Leavy sees as an advantage that women journalists have over their male colleagues.

"The truth is male athletes tell women things they would never tell men writers," Leavy said.

Leavy stated that women usually ask athletes different types of questions, eliciting different pieces of information.

"Athletes get tired of competing with male writers who can't possibly know as much as they do but are determined to prove that they played ball too," said Leavy. She added that in covering games, men's and women's stories are essentially the same.

Leavy began working for the Post's sports section in 1979, when there were few women sportswriters. She noted that the over 400 women sportswriters in the United States today still face challenges.

"In sportswriting, gender is a double-edged sword," said Leavy. "It can work for you and it can work against you."

The biggest difference, Leavy noted, is that the women can never become "one of the guys" as male reporters can. However, Leavy feels this separation gives the women the perspective journalism requires and prevents them from falling into the "reverence" that "has always been a really big problem in sportswriting."

Leavy added that some sports figures go out of their way to accommodate female writers.

Leavy, who wrote her graduate thesis at Columbia on Notre Dame graduate Red Smith, considered by many the best sportswriter in America's history, moved to the Post's Style section in 1984 after tiring of the extensive travel involved in sports journalism.

In 1989 she quit the paper and wrote her first novel, "Squeeze Play" about the experiences of a female journalist covering a professional baseball team in Washington D.C.

Norman Lear is planning to adapt "Squeeze Play" to the screen with a female journalist as the star, but Leavy felt as she persuaded sports figures to talk about their private lives, Leavy often worried that she was betraying the athletes by printing the personal issues they discussed.

But while reporters must respect an athlete's right to privacy, Leavy feels they do have a responsibility to talk to the press and paying public.

Dayton, Ohio—Fighting in stead of flinching, the Lady Musketeers’ basketball team traveled into a hostile University of Dayton Arena Tuesday night and beat the Flyers 73-67, leaving one coach grinning and another gaping.

"We just had a great game tonight," said a beaming Irish head coach Roger Phelps. "We did a lot of good things tonight, and I think, if they look at them, they've got a lot of mind and a lot of heart."

Meanwhile, second-year Dayton coach Jim O'Brien was surprised by Notre Dame's ability to handle Dayton's usually pestering press.

"The main factor was that they were able to find the tempo by not allowing us to get much out of our press," said O'Brien, who saw his team score three of those points since he has been coaching the Flyers. "If you're not scoring, you aren't getting into your press."

The victory for Notre Dame came on the heels of Saturday's 68-67 win in Virginia, in which the Irish squandered an eight-point lead with 4:10 remaining in the game, a time the Irish didn't buckle.

With a 1:52 lead, Dayton distance-shooting specialist Norm Greheytify a three-pointer to narrow the Irish lead to 66-62. But the Lady Irish countered with a Monica Moore 4 from three-point range, bringing the Irish lead to 69-64.

"We had to make sure we respected the long people when we had people like that," said Phelps. "We had to make sure we respected the long people when we had people like that."

The Irish, instead of faltering under the Dayton press, took advantage of the mass of bodies under the Dayton basket by sending a Kevin Ellery inbound pass to a bolting Daimon Sweet. Sweet beat 6-11 forward Wes Cofer off the breakaway and bounced a layup off the glass to make the score 69-64.

"We're been working on the press, and we knew what we had to do," said Phelps. "We just want to bring that pressure and advantage of what they gave us, and a lot of teams won't do that."

Notre Dame shot 52 percent from the floor for 84 percent performance for 11 performance from Tower, who had 22 points and 11 rebounds. The Irish held Dayton to 25 of 63 shooting (39.7 percent), including 15 of 37 (40.6 percent) from behind the three-point stripe.

Notre Dame's dynamic Chas Jones, despite leading all scorers with 28 points, was able to score only five of 17 shots in scoring those points.

"It was a big confidence booster for us," said O'Brien. "I think we had a lot of people when we were shooting. It was a big confidence booster for us."
